No. 45,071

STATE OF KANSAS,
Appellee and Cross-Appellant,

v.

ELMER G. PAXTON,
Appellant and Cross-Appellee.

SYLLABUS BY THE COURT

1. A change of venue on account of prejudice against the accused by inhabitants of the county in which the case is pending should not be granted unless it is affirmatively made to appear that such prejudice exists as will be reasonably certain to prevent a fair trial.

2. A male accused cannot complain about the exclusion of women from the jury, in the absence of a showing of prejudice by reason thereof.

3. When an accused, knowing at the time of impanelling the jury that a juror is incompetent, fails to challenge for cause, he waives any right to make complaint upon that ground thereafter.

4. A verdict of guilty which has been approved by the trial court will not be set aside because of insufficiency of evidence, unless it is clearly made to appear that upon no hypothesis whatever is there substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached in the trial court.

5. To sustain a conviction of obtaining money by false pretenses, there must be evidence the accused had actual knowledge of the falsity of the representations made, or lacking such actual knowledge, intended to, and did, convey the impression he had actual knowledge that the representations were true and could be believed and acted on, thereby deceiving another to his injury.

6. A prior conviction by court-martial may not be used for the purpose of imposing an enhanced sentence under the habitual criminal statute (K.S.A. 21-107a).

7. In a criminal prosecution wherein the defendant was convicted of obtaining money by false pretenses (G.S. 1949 [now K.S.A.] 21-551), the record is examined, and as more fully explained in the opinion, it is held: (1) The trial court did not err in (a) denying defendant's application for change of venue; (b) overruling defendant's challenge to the array of jurors; (c) denying defendant's motion for new trial based on alleged trial errors; and (d) refusing to sentence the defendant as a second offender under the habitual criminal statute; and (2) the verdict is supported by substantial competent evidence.

Appeal from Lane district court; BERT J. VANCE, judge. Opinion filed May 11, 1968. Affirmed.

Raymond L. Spring, of Topeka, argued the cause, and Dale H. Corley, Lelyn J. Braun and Patrick J. Regan, of Garden City, and Richard D. Greene, of Denver, Colorado, were with him on the brief for the appellant and cross-appellee.

Daniel D. Metz, assistant attorney general, argued the cause, and Robert C. Londerholm, attorney general, and John S. Elting, county attorney, were with him on the brief for the appellee and cross-appellant.

The opinion of the court was delivered by O'CONNOR, J.: This is an appeal by the defendant, Elmer G. Paxton, who was convicted by a jury of the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses, in violation of G.S. 1949 [now K.S.A.] 21-551. The basic questions presented by the defendant are: (1) alleged trial errors which he contends denied him a fair trial by an impartial jury; (2) the sufficiency of evidence to sustain the conviction. A third question, which is the basis of a cross-appeal by the state, is whether or not a prior court-martial conviction may be used to invoke the provisions of the habitual criminal act.

Early in December 1962, the defendant, R. V. Woodard and Richard Ulmer met at Woodard's home in Anthony, Kansas. Woodard had been in the termite control business for nearly twenty years. An agreement was reached to recheck the houses of Woodard's former customers for termites and ascertain if any other services could be rendered. It was further agreed that all checks received in payment for any services were to be made to Ulmer, who would cash the checks and receive twenty per cent thereof for his part in the operation. The balance, after payment of expenses, was to be divided equally between the defendant and Woodard. The purpose of Ulmer's acting as the "check man" was that if any trouble developed, his fine could be paid by the other men, and thus, embarrassment to Woodard's company be avoided.

Thereafter, the three men, along with Richard Barker and two others, left Anthony, taking with them Woodard's car and truck. After stops in several towns and communities the group arrived at Dighton, Kansas, on December 12, 1962, where, at defendant's suggestion, they called on C. W. Monroe. Defendant knew Mr. Monroe to be an elderly person, having tried to sell him a termite job a year or so before. Also, Mr. Monroe had had his residence treated for termites by the Woodard company in 1960, with renewal contracts and annual inspections in 1961 and 1962. About 1:30 p.m. defendant and Barker went to the door and introduced themselves to Mr. Monroe as being with the Woodard company. The two men informed Mr. Monroe they were inspecting for termites and wood rot. Defendant went to one corner of the house and jumped up and down, the floor "gave a little," and Mr. Monroe was told it likely needed bracing. The men asked if they could inspect under the house. After receiving permission to do so, Barker made the inspection and returned with some decayed wood in his hand. Barker showed Mr. Monroe the wood and told him there was wood rot in the floor joists. Woodard was then called in from the car, and he showed Mr. Monroe some wood rot on a window casing of the house. Mr. Monroe was informed his house could be treated with a chemical called "penta" (pentachlorophenol) which would permanently take care of the wood rot. After Mr. Monroe agreed to the treatment, the men left. Shortly, two other men in a pickup truck arrived and sprayed fluid underneath the house for approximately forty-five minutes or an hour. Later in the afternoon the defendant returned to the Monroe home with Ulmer, whom defendant introduced as the "chemical man" and the person handling the collections. Defendant did most of the talking. Mr. Monroe was told the treatment had been completed, that it was very expensive, and that 170 gallons of the chemical, at $6.80 per gallon, had been used. Mr. Monroe was directed to make a check for $1,156 to Ulmer. At defendant's request, Mr. Monroe called his bank and authorized payment of the check, whereupon the men left. Ulmer cashed the check that same afternoon, and the men gathered at a cafe in Dighton. In the ensuing conversation Barker expressed the thought that they could have obtained more money for the job, and defendant suggested they go back and attempt to get more money from Mr. Monroe. Woodard vetoed the idea. Twenty per cent of the money was paid to Ulmer, the expenses were paid, and the balance was divided between Woodard and the defendant.

Defendant's trial which resulted in his conviction took place in Lane county in April 1967. His first trial occurred three months previously and ended with a hung jury. Barker was tried and convicted in December 1964 in the same county for his part in the transaction.

We shall first direct our attention to numerous trial errors which defendant contends denied him a fair trial by an impartial jury. It should be mentioned that the points raised were set forth as grounds in defendant's motion for new trial which was denied by the trial court. We note the thrust of defendant's argument to be that when all of the alleged trial errors are considered together, the totality of circumstances surrounding the trial demonstrates a reasonable likelihood that the verdict of the jury was affected by prejudice, citing Sheppard v. Maxwell, 384 U.S. 333, 16 L.Ed.2d 600, 86 S.Ct. 1507, and Estes v. Texas, 381 U.S. 532, 14 L.Ed.2d 543, 85 S.Ct. 1628. Appellate counsel has done a commendable job of weaving language from those cases into the factual situation here and thus presenting his client's cause in the most favorable light possible. Careful scrutiny, however, of each of the alleged trial errors, singly as well as collectively, will reveal that the taint of prejudice which would warrant reversal has not been made to appear.

Complaint is made that defendant's petition for change of venue, filed pursuant to K.S.A. 62-1318, was not acted on favorably by the trial court. In his petition the defendant alleged that it would be impossible to select a jury in Lane county that could fairly and impartially try the case because of the size of the county and the fact that persons other than the defendant had previously been tried in that county or entered pleas of guilty to the same charge upon which the present information was predicated, and further, that in defendant's first trial it was learned the citizens of the county had general knowledge of the offense and preconceived opinions as to defendant's guilt.

The only evidence offered by the defendant in support of his petition was the affidavit of his trial counsel, Lelyn J. Braun. In his affidavit Mr. Braun referred to the examination of prospective jurors in the first trial to the effect they had preconceived opinions about defendant's guilt, and then recounted what one or more of the jurors told him concerning their deliberations in the jury room. No counter affidavits were offered by the state. The trial judge, in denying the petition, observed that the attorney's affidavit was hearsay and otherwise improper, and further noted that in the previous trial twenty-four jurors had been qualified without difficulty from a panel of less than forty persons originally called. No complaint is now made about the court's refusal to consider Mr. Braun's affidavit.

When the petition for change of venue was presented to the district court, some reference was made to evidence submitted at the first trial where a similar petition had been presented and denied. None of that evidence, however, has been abstracted for our benefit.

We need devote little time to the principles of law governing an application for a change of venue in a criminal prosecution. Our cases quite generally hold that specific facts and circumstances showing prejudice must be proved to the satisfaction of the trial court (State v. Eldridge, 197 Kan. 694, 421 P.2d 170, cert. denied 389 U.S. 991, 19 L.Ed.2d 483, 88 S.Ct. 486, and cases cited therein), and when the trial court's ruling upon this question is supported by competent evidence, such ruling will not be disturbed (State v. Hooper, 140 Kan. 481, 37 P.2d 52; State v. Miller, 131 Kan. 36, 289 Pac. 483). Two of our most recent expressions on the subject where the matter was explored in considerable depth are State v. Poulos, 196 Kan. 253, 411 P.2d 694, cert. denied 385 U.S. 827, 17 L.Ed.2d 64, 87 S.Ct. 63, and State v. Turner, 193 Kan. 189, 392 P.2d 863.

The rule is well established that before a court is justified in sustaining an application for a change of venue on account of prejudice against the defendant by the inhabitants of the county in which the cause is pending, it must affirmatively appear that such prejudice exists as will be reasonably certain to prevent a fair trial. (State v. Turner, supra.)

Upon the record before us, we have no difficulty in concluding that defendant failed to present affirmative evidence that such prejudice existed as to make it reasonably certain he could not obtain a fair trial, and consequently, the trial court's ruling will not be disturbed. Moreover, a study of the proceedings leading up to the selection of the jury demonstrates that a trial could be had by a fair and impartial jury.

The population of Lane county numbered 3,077, with approximately 1,200 persons eligible for jury duty. At the voir dire examination, out of forty-three prospective jurors examined, nine were excused because of preconceived opinions and one was excused because he had served as a juror in Barker's case. Nine others were excused for various reasons until twenty-four jurors were duly qualified and passed for cause by both sides. Each side thereupon exercised six peremptory challenges. The record fails to disclose any undue difficulty was encountered in obtaining a qualified jury. Each member of the jury finally selected was thoroughly examined. The trial court was abundantly cautious and promptly excused any prospective juror who gave any indication that he had formed a fixed and abiding opinion in the case.

This case is not one where the community was exposed to newspaper, radio or TV coverage prior to or during trial, nor is there a showing that the case was even mentioned in the local press or the broadcasting media in the area. To attempt to analogize these facts with those in Sheppard v. Maxwell, supra, and Estes v. Texas, supra, is unthinkable. (See, State v. Eldridge, supra.)

Defendant challenged the array of jurors on the basis that women were not included on the panel. As an explanation of their absence, the county clerk testified that since the names of women could not be placed on the jury lists without their consent, township trustees were probably reluctant to ask them to serve. The trial court, in overruling the challenge, observed that there had been women jurors on prior panels and that there had been neither a systematic nor intentional exclusion of women from the jury lists. The ruling of the court must stand, even assuming women were excluded from this particular panel. Neither our state nor federal constitution guarantees the right to trial by jury consisting of both men and women. The defendant, not being a member of the excluded class, is in no position to complain about the absence of women from the panel, there being no showing he has actually been prejudiced thereby. (State v. Neff, 169 Kan. 116, 218 P.2d 248, cert. denied 340 U.S. 866, 95 L.Ed. 632, 71 S.Ct. 90; State v. Snyder, 126 Kan. 582, 270 Pac. 590; Fay v. New York, 332 U.S. 261, 91 L.Ed. 2043, 67 S.Ct. 1613.)

As part of his "totality of circumstances" argument defendant also claims he was prejudiced by certain events occurring during the examination of three prospective jurors. A brief narration of the proceedings will show the argument is patently unfounded. After excusing John West because he had served as a juror in the Barker case, the trial judge commented, "The same evidence basically would be used in this case." Upon objection by defense counsel, the judge amended his statement to "similar circumstances and facts would be involved and the same complaining witness." Albert Ehmke, during his examination, expressed some reservation about a defendant who failed to testify. After defendant's challenge for cause, the judge asked the juror if he could follow an instruction to the effect that whether or not the defendant took the stand was not to be considered. Ehmke responded that he would, and the challenge was overruled. Defense counsel pursued the matter further, and Ehmke remained steadfast in his denial that failure of the defendant to take the stand would not be a factor in his decision. When Jerel Barnett was examined there was some indication on his part that the fact the defendant was charged was an indication of guilt and that he would expect the defense to introduce evidence to prove the defendant's innocence. Defendant's subsequent challenge for cause was overruled. The court observed that counsel's questions were unclear, and promptly corrected any misconceptions of the law as expressed by the juror. Barnett assured the court that he would follow an instruction to the effect that defendant was presumed innocent until proved guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. We find nothing in these events, and particularly the remarks and comments of the trial judge, that would indicate bias or prejudice against the defendant, nor can it be said that the remaining jurors were prejudiced by what took place in their presence.

Only Ehmke and Barnett were unsuccessfully challenged for cause by the defendant. In both instances, after the challenges were denied, defense counsel pursued his line of questioning and eventually passed each juror for cause. Barnett was subsequently removed with a peremptory challenge—by which side is not shown in the record. At any rate he did not sit as a juror. On the other hand, Ehmke was not challenged peremptorily and was permitted to remain. Why defendant chose not to exercise one of his peremptory challenges against Ehmke, we are not told. No contention is made that had he used one of his challenges on Ehmke, he would have been forced to accept some other juror objectionable to him whom he had challenged peremptorily. Presumably, defendant used his peremptory challenges, with the possible exception of Barnett, on prospective jurors against whom he voiced no objection during his extensive voir dire examination. Under all the circumstances, he is in no position to complain about the trial court's rulings on his challenges for cause against Ehmke or Barnett. (State v. Hoy, 199 Kan. 340, 430 P.2d 275; State v. Springer, 172 Kan. 239, 239 P.2d 944; State v. Hooper, supra; State v. Tucker, 137 Kan. 84, 19 P.2d 436.)

During the voir dire examination it developed that the wife of one of the prospective jurors, Floyd Fuller, was a first cousin of the wife of C. W. Monroe, the complaining witness. Defendant now claims his conviction is vitiated because Fuller was related to the injured party and thus was an incompetent juror. (K.S.A. 62-1406.) The point requires no discussion on its merits, for the simple reason that the juror was never challenged for cause. Notwithstanding the relationship was discovered early in the examination, no objection was made until defendant's motion for new trial. Ordinarily, a question touching upon a juror's qualifications, if not raised until after the verdict is rendered, comes too late and is not available for the purpose of the defendant's obtaining a new trial. (State v. Wainwright, 190 Kan. 619, 376 P.2d 829; State v. McCombs, 163 Kan. 225, 181 P.2d 473.) K.S.A. 62-1410 requires that all challenges for cause be made before the jury is sworn, except where the cause for challenge is not discovered until after the jury is sworn and before the introduction of evidence. When a party, knowing at the time of impanelling the jury that a juror is incompetent, fails to challenge for cause, he waives any right to make complaint upon that ground thereafter. (State v. Hilbish, 126 Kan. 282, 267 Pac. 1109; State v. Jackson, 27 Kan. 581.)

Defendant also complains of certain events occurring during the course of the trial which he describes as follows: "The state followed a course of conduct clearly calculated to prejudice the jury against defendant by demonstration of the unsavory character of his associates [Woodard and Ulmer]."

When testifying, Woodard volunteered the information he had gone to the penitentiary shortly after the present Monroe transaction. Woodard was then queried by the state whether his first contract with Mr. Monroe was "a legitimate termite contract." Defendant's objection to the word "legitimate" was overruled by the court. This question came after Mr. Monroe had testified about his contract with Woodard in 1960 and that he had been satisfied with the terms and the treatment he had received under the earlier contract. Further, Mr. Monroe, Ulmer and Woodard had testified about events leading up to and including the treatment of Monroe's house in 1962. The implication that this second contract was not "legitimate" may not have been too far wrong. At least we cannot say it was prejudicial. Objections to subsequent questions relating to the termination of Woodard's license as a termite exterminator and his relationship with the defendant after the Monroe transaction were sustained by the trial court. Any question about the propriety of such interrogation was cured when the line of questioning was withdrawn and the court admonished the jury "to completely disregard anything that may have been said or implied about any dealings that went on subsequent to the dealings with Mr. Monroe." On the direct examination of Ulmer, the state elicited testimony that he had previously been in the penitentiary on a check charge and was presently in the custody of the sheriff of Lane county. Defendant, failing to object to this testimony, is precluded from now raising the matter for the first time on appeal. (K.S.A. 60-404; State v. Patterson, 200 Kan. 176, 434 P.2d 808; State v. Donahue, 197 Kan. 317, 416 P.2d 287; State v. Freeman, 195 Kan. 561, 408 P.2d 612, cert. denied 384 U.S. 1025, 16 L.Ed.2d 1030, 86 S.Ct. 1981.)

The defendant also complains he was prejudiced by a comment of the trial judge made at the conclusion of the testimony of Dr. Hart, an expert witness for the defense. While the court's comment was injudicious in nature, it was not prejudicial. Furthermore, the defendant failed to register any objection at the time.

After the trial, defense counsel apparently discovered that an aunt of the juror Ehmke had been a victim in a similar transaction in November 1963. The matter was brought to the attention of the trial court as a ground in defendant's motion for new trial. The state produced an affidavit of the juror that he did not learn of his aunt's experience until after the present trial. There was no connection between the two transactions; none of the same parties was involved. Clearly, this formed no basis for the granting of a new trial.

In light of our discussion of the various trial errors, we must conclude that the defendant has failed to demonstrate he did not receive a fair trial by an impartial jury. The case was vigorously tried by both sides before an experienced trial judge whom the record discloses exercised great care and patience to insure a trial free from prejudicial error. The burden is always upon the defendant to make it affirmatively appear that his substantial rights have been prejudicially affected. That burden has not been sustained in this appeal.

We now turn to defendant's second basic contention, namely, the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. This matter was presented to the trial court at the conclusion of the state's evidence, again at the conclusion of all the evidence, and finally, in defendant's motion for new trial. It is conceded that the jury was properly instructed concerning the elements of the offense with which defendant was charged in accord with what was stated in State v. Handke, 185 Kan. 38, 340 P.2d 877. Among other things, the jury was told that it must find beyond a reasonable doubt the defendant falsely represented there was wood rot in the floor joists of Monroe's residence and the house had been permanently treated for wood rot, and further, that the defendant knew these representations were not in fact true. At the outset defendant acknowledges the receipt of money from Mr. Monroe by means of the check made payable to Ulmer. Likewise, he concedes that he is bound by any statements of Barker and Woodard made in his presence to Monroe. (State v. McCormick, 57 Kan. 440, 46 Pac. 777.) Defendant's complaint of insufficient evidence is confined to three disputed issues which he claims were not proved by the state: (1) the absence of wood rot in the floor joists, (2) the house was not permanently treated, and (3) that even if the assumption is made that the representations concerning the presence of wood rot and the permanent treatment of the house were false, defendant had no knowledge of their falsity.

The role of this court in considering the sufficiency of evidence to support a verdict was clearly stated in the recent case of State v. Helm, 200 Kan. 147, 434 P.2d 796, where we said:

> "In a criminal prosecution it is the function of the jury in the first instance, and of the trial court after verdict, to determine what facts are established by the evidence, and before a verdict of a jury which has been approved by the trial court may be set aside on appeal on the ground of insufficiency of evidence, it must be made clearly to appear that upon no hypothesis whatever is there sufficient substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached in the trial court. (State v. Walker, 198 Kan. 14, 422 P.2d 565, Syl. ¶1; State v. Shaw, 195 Kan. 677, 408 P.2d 650; State v. Gregory, 191 Kan. 687, 383 P.2d 965; and State v. Ledbetter, 183 Kan. 302, 327 P.2d 1039.)
> "When considering the sufficiency of circumstantial evidence to sustain a conviction of crime on appeal, the question is not whether the evidence is incompatible with any reasonable hypothesis except guilt. That question was for the jury and the trial court. The function of the appellate court is limited to ascertaining whether there was a basis in the evidence for a reasonable inference of guilt. (State v. Crosby, 182 Kan. 677, 324 P.2d 197, 76 A.L.R.2d 514, and authorities cited therein at p. 685 of the official report; and State v. Scoggins, 199 Kan. 108, 427 P.2d 603.)" (p. 151.)

Was there sufficient evidence to show the absence of wood rot in the floor joists of the Monroe residence? The state produced testimony by two expert witnesses, Mr. Edmund F. Martinez, district entomologist for the Kansas State Board of Agriculture, and Mr. Dean Garwood, director of the division of entomology for said board. Martinez inspected the house in July 1964 and again in October of that year. Garwood was present and took part in the October inspection. Both witnesses testified they found no evidence of any wood rot underneath any portion of the Monroe residence. They further testified that had there been wood rot in the joists in December 1962 (the date of this offense), evidence of such condition would have been present at the time of their inspection nearly two years later. Contrary to defendant's argument, the fact that Martinez also observed that a two-by-four section of a floor plate appeared to have been replaced at sometime cannot be regarded as being inconsistent with his prior testimony. When or why the section was replaced was not shown. The defense offered some evidence through Philip Marvin, an expert witness, tending to show that he had found wood rot in an inactive stage at the time of his inspection in January 1967. But we cannot weigh the evidence; that was the jury's province.

Was the evidence sufficient to show the house was not permanently treated? It was clearly established that a proper treatment for wood rot is a spray solution consisting of five per cent pentachlorophenol mixed in diesel fuel. After the solution is sprayed on wood the pentachlorophenol leaves crystalline deposits on the surface of the wood which reflect light. As described by Garwood, "It would look as though there were particles of glass on the wood when you shine a light on them; these would reflect the light and you could see them." These characteristics remain present on the surface of treated wood for up to five years or more after application. Both Garwood and Martinez testified their visual inspections did not reveal any crystalline formations which would, in their opinion, denote that the house had in fact been treated with pentachlorophenol. Chemical analyses made of shavings taken from the joists of the house also did not reveal the presence of the chemical. The defense introduced evidence tending to cast some doubt on the reliability of the method used by the state chemist in testing the shavings. Mr. Marvin testified his inspection in 1967 disclosed areas of a "white bloom" substance which could have been "penta" residue. Again, the weight and credit to be given this testimony was for the jury.

Was there evidence that defendant had knowledge of the falsity of the representations concerning the presence of wood rot and the treatment applied? Defendant argues he was not under the house, so he had no knowledge of what was there, and likewise, there was no evidence he knew what the treatment was. As a general proposition, knowledge of the falsity of the representations is required to sustain a conviction of obtaining money by false pretenses; but this requirement is not confined to actual knowledge in the true sense. The following discussion is found in Perkins on Criminal Law (1957) at page 262:

> "The original English statute included the words 'designedly and knowingly.' They were omitted from > the later legislation in that country; and statutes in some of the states include them while others do not. There seems to be no difference in the result, however, because there is a requirement of 'knowledge' under either type of enactment. The word 'knowledge' is unfortunate in this connection because the actual requirement of the law is not limited to knowledge in the true sense. If the representation is really untrue this part of the requirement is satisfied if it is made by one who knows it is untrue, or believes it is untrue, or is quite aware that he has not the slightest notion whether it is true or not."

In Bank v. Hart, 82 Kan. 398, 108 Pac. 818, this court stated:

> "False representations are actionable when made fraudulently—that is, to induce another to part with his money or property—if believed and acted upon and made with knowledge of their falsity, or when made for such purpose by one who has no knowledge upon the subject but who intends to convey, and does convey, the impression that he does have actual knowledge that they are true, and thereby deceives the other to his injury...." (p. 400.)

Also, see, State v. Lintner, 141 Kan. 505, 41 P.2d 1036.

As we have pointed out, the defendant is bound by the representations of Barker as well as those made by himself and Woodard. There was ample evidence from which it could be inferred that even if defendant lacked actual knowledge of the accuracy of the representations, his intention was to convey the impression they were in fact true and could be believed and acted on by Mr. Monroe. Without going into detail, we also believe there was sufficient direct and circumstantial evidence to show a conspiracy between the defendant and his accomplices who had actual knowledge of the falsity of the representations, thus charging the defendant with the knowledge of his co-conspirators. (See, State v. Borserine, 184 Kan. 405, 337 P.2d 697.)

We must conclude that the verdict of the jury is supported by substantial competent evidence proving each of the elements of the offense charged, and the conviction is sustained.

The state has cross-appealed on a reserved question. Before sentencing, records were introduced showing the defendant had been convicted by a general court-martial in Berlin, Germany, on May 6, 1949, of robbery and felonious assault, and was sentenced to a dishonorable discharge, total forfeitures, and confinement at hard labor for a period of three years. The trial court refused to recognize the conviction for the purpose of sentencing the defendant as a second offender under the habitual criminal statute (K.S.A. 21-107a). We have given this matter thorough consideration and are not impressed with the cases cited from a limited number of jurisdictions which apparently recognize such convictions for the purpose of imposing an enhanced sentence. Our statute applies when there are former felony convictions committed "in or out of this state." We have held that the statute does not require the foreign conviction to be a felony under the laws of this state; it is sufficient that the offense was a felony as defined by the law of such other state or jurisdiction. (Tyrell v. State, 199 Kan. 142, 427 P.2d 500; State v. Stiff, 148 Kan. 224, 80 P.2d 1089, rehearing 148 Kan. 457, 83 P.2d 424.) Courts-martial convictions frequently relate to offenses of a strictly military character which have no counterpart in the civil law, such as desertion, willful disobedience of a lawful order of a superior officer, and misbehavior before the enemy. We cannot imagine the legislature contemplated that K.S.A. 21-107a was to be applied to a person previously convicted of an offense peculiar only to the military establishment. On the other hand, were we to say that only those military convictions were to be recognized which would be felonies as defined by the Kansas law, we would, in effect, be adding a requirement to the statute that any foreign conviction be a felony under our law. This we cannot do. We hold that a prior conviction by court-martial may not be used to invoke the provisions of the habitual criminal statute.

The judgment is affirmed both as to the appeal and cross-appeal.

No. 45,071

STATE OF KANSAS,
Appellee and Cross-Appellant,

v.

ELMER G. PAXTON,
Appellant and Cross-Appellee.

Supplemental Opinion

SYLLABUS BY THE COURT

Certain factual statements appearing in the original opinion in State v. Paxton, 201 Kan. 353, ... P.2d ....., filed May 11, 1968, are deleted and corrected.

Appeal from Lane district court; BERT J. VANCE, judge. Supplemental opinion filed June 19, 1968. Affirmed.

Raymond L. Spring, of Topeka, argued the cause, and Dale H. Corley, Lelyn J. Braun and Patrick J. Regan, of Garden City, and Richard D. Greene, of Denver, Colorado, were with him on the brief for the appellant and cross-appellee.

Daniel D. Metz, assistant attorney general, argued the cause, and Robert C. Londerholm, attorney general, and John S. Elting, county attorney, were with him on the brief for the appellee and cross-appellant.

The opinion of the court was delivered by O'CONNOR, J.: The defendant (appellant) has filed a motion for rehearing on the decision affirming his conviction (State v. Paxton, 201 Kan. 353, ... P.2d .....). After careful consideration we find the motion should be and it is hereby denied.

Our attention, however, has been directed to certain matters in the second paragraph of page 361 of the opinion which should be corrected and clarified. Accordingly, the paragraph is deleted and in its stead the following is substituted:

After the trial, defense counsel apparently discovered that an aunt of the juror Ehmke had been a victim in a similar transaction in November 1963. The matter was brought to the attention of the trial court as a ground in defendant's motion for new trial in which he alleged the juror "probably" had knowledge of the previous transaction. There is nothing in the record indicating such knowledge on the part of the juror. Moreover, there is no showing that the defendant was connected with the prior transaction in any way. Clearly, this formed no basis for the granting of a new trial.

In all other respects we adhere to what was said and held in the original opinion.

APPENDIX C

For the convenience of the court, copies of the record as printed below being unavailable, certain pertinent portions of the record are set forth herein rather than being set forth at length in the statement of the case.

LEO BROWN

Called as a witness in behalf of the defendant, being first duly sworn, testifies as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Braun

Q. Would you state your name and address, please? A. Leo Brown, Dighton, Kansas.

Q. And what official capacity do you hold with the county government? A. County Clerk.

Q. How long have you held this position? A. Twelve years.

Q. How long have you resided in Lane County, Kansas, Mr. Brown? A. All my life.

Q. As County Clerk, Mr. Brown, you are in charge of selection of jurors in cases in the District Court of Lane County, Kansas, are you not? A. Well—

Q. Or at least you participate in the selection? A. I participate.

Q. Are you also as County Clerk familiar with the population of Lane County, Kansas? A. Yes.

Q. Would you state what the population of Lane County, Kansas, is? A. Is now?

Q. Yes. A. It's not complete yet but it will be nearly the same as last year.

Q. And in numbers what would that be? A. The figures right now as they stand, 3077. I think we will add some to that.

Q. Of that number how many constitute eligible jurors to serve in cases of the District Court of Lane County, Kansas? A. I have done a little checking; I would say right at 40%.

Q. So you would have approximately 1200 people who would be eligible for jury duty. Of that number of eligible jurors how many are of the female sex? A. Well now, that part of it, it would be hard. You would have to check through the books. I haven't checked.

Q. In your prospective juror lists from which jurors are selected there are women included? A. No, there isn't any in the lists.

Q. Stated another way, are there any names of any women in the jury box from which prospective jurors' names are selected? A. No.

Q. Why is that? A. I think it's more habit than anything else. The township trustees and the mayor are the ones that select the names to be drawn from; they just never have listed women. They are required to be asked if they want to serve and I think they just never have.

Q. As far as you know there are no eligible female jurors? A. Not at the present.

Q. On this jury list that was drawn on April 4, 1967, that would be true in that instance? A. Yes.

THE COURT: Mr. Braun, do I understand you are going to raise the point whether there are female jurors in this box?

MR. BRAUN: Your Honor, I may have misled the Court; I would like for the purpose of this petition for change of venue to raise two questions. Number one, the absence of any females on the list of prospective jurors and, number two, the other reason for this was to confine my arguments or to tie into my argument here on the matter of knowledge generally in the community of prospective jurors.

THE COURT: That's not what I am asking you. I am asking you are you challenging the array?

MR. BRAUN: Yes, Your Honor.

THE COURT: It's a little late to challenge the array, isn't it?

(Thereupon, argument is had by Mr. Braun off the record.)

THE COURT: Let's find out why there were no women jurors in this county.

A. There has been nothing definite ever decided that they wouldn't do any such thing, but the township trustees, I suppose, have been reluctant to ask women to serve. They figure that they have to be asked and if they refuse they can't be listed anyway. I suppose that's been the thinking on it; I don't know. I suppose we could have insisted they list what women they could. It's just something that's, like I say, it has been kind of a habit, I suppose.

THE COURT: Do you have any authority, Mr. Braun, that shows that women have to be included?

MR. BRAUN: No, I don't, Your Honor, at this time. I'm not sure the statute says it must be. I believe it refers to those only which are exempted from jury duty.

MR. BROWN: Can I say anything further?

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. BROWN: The statute there sets out, like what I was saying a minute ago, that women need to be asked before they can be placed on the jury list. I take it from that if they refused they can't be listed anyhow.

The defendant appears in person and by Mr. Lelyn J. Braun, of Corley, Braun & Regan, 114 West Pine Street, Garden City, Kansas.

THE COURT: Let the record show that this is Case No. 309, the State of Kansas v. Elmer G. Paxton. The State appears by John S. Elting, County Attorney, and Daniel D. Metz. The defendant appears in person and by Lelyn J. Braun.

I took under advisement the challenge made by the defendant to the array. The basis of the challenge was that there was no women jurors selected. I have studied the matter carefully and I have gone over the prior jury lists in this county and I find that in prior years and on prior juries we have had women jurors and I have come to the conclusion that there has been no systematic intentional elimination of women jurors; that the situation that there are no women on the panel arises from our peculiar Kansas statutes to make a woman exempt unless she indicates to a personal property tax assessor that she wishes to serve, and because of the recent change in personal property tax assessment there is very little, if any, opportunity for personal property tax assessors to talk to any of the women who might be eligible. I think that is the reason that there are no women on the jury panel and, in addition, from the nature of this case, there is no particular reason why women should or should not be on the panel. In other words, this does not involve a case in which women jurors would be required because of any peculiarity of their viewpoint. For that reason I am going to overrule the challenge to the array. (R. pp. 5-7)

The following transpired in examination of jurors on voir dire:

JOHN WEST

Examination by Mr. Elting

A. I think I seen them here about four years ago. I was a juror on that Monroe trial. How many years ago was that? I seen those men.

Q. You were a juror in the State v. Barker case? A. Yeah, of Charley Monroe.

THE COURT: Under those circumstances, if there's no objection, I believe you will be excused.

MR. ELTING: No objection.

THE COURT: The same evidence basically would be used in this case.

MR. BRAUN: I would like to object to that, your Honor, at this time, this statement by the court and I don't know whether we can cure that now, but, Your Honor, we the same. It might prejudice my client.
can't be telling this jury the evidence is going to be exactly (sic).

THE COURT: I recognize that, Mr. Braun; if I said the same evidence, I am perhaps mistaken, but similar circumstances and facts would be involved and the same complaining witness, so I think that it's only fair that you not sit as a juror and I am going to excuse you. If you are needed later in the term you will be notified.

Call another juror.

CLERK: Albert Ehmke.

(Thereupon, Albert Ehmke is sworn to answer questions.) (R. 11)

ALBERT EHMKE

(Passed for cause by Mr. Elting.)

Examination by Mr. Braun

Q. If it should develop Mr. Paxton does not take the stand to testify in this case, would that fact tend to prejudice you towards the defendant on the basis on which you are going to resolve this evidence? A. It might make a difference.

Q. And why would that be true? A. I suppose because I'm human. I think the evidence would have to show at least why he didn't take the stand.

Q. Well, maybe I misled you. The mere fact a person does not choose to testify, you feel that would tend to create some doubt in your mind whether or not he's guilty or innocent? A. This has always been a sore point with me, yes.

Q. In other words, if you heard about people who choose not to testify from the news media or wherever you heard about it, you always felt the lack of testimony indicated his guilt? A. I can't see why an innocent man can't say so.

Q. In spite of the fact we have a constitutional privilege not to be a witness against ourself? A. I realize that.

Q. You feel if you were to serve on this jury that would tend to leave some reservation in your mind? A. I'm afraid it might.

MR. BRAUN: We challenge this man for cause.

THE COURT: Mr. Ehmke, if I instruct you that the law is that the State of Kansas has to prove this man guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, he doesn't have to prove he's innocent at all, and that whether he chooses to take the stand or not is something you should not consider; in other words, he's got no obligation to take the stand at all, you should not consider whether he takes the stand, could you follow that instruction? A. I would do my best.

THE COURT: Can you follow it? Would you follow it? A. Yes.

THE COURT: I will overrule the challenge.

Q. (By Mr. Braun) Now, Mr. Ehmke, so I understand your answer, you realize what you told the Judge, don't you? A. I've got a pretty fair idea.

Q. Let me state it another way. You just told Judge Vance that if he instructs you that way, that's the law; that's not only the law of this trial, that's the law of the land, and you will have to be bound by it. A. Okay.

Q. That's a tremendous responsibility. In spite of what you have just told is your own personal feeling, will you then follow the law even though you may not agree with it. A. I have followed laws I haven't agreed with, yes.

Q. So I understand this, because I can appreciate your opinion, but I also appreciate what is at stake here now, you appreciate and you fully understand the tremendous responsibility that's thrust upon you as a prospective juror, do you not? A. Yes.

Q. You are going to be taking an oath that you will fairly try this case? A. Yes.

Q. If the Court so instructs you, you will have no reluctance even though you may not agree with it, you will bring in a verdict, if this man may choose not to testify in his own behalf? A. I don't know if I followed all that.

Q. Well, let me see whether I can state it some other way. You expressed sort of an opinion that you felt that a man ought to tell his own story and you understood that the law says he doesn't have to? A. I realize that.

Q. But in your own mind you have some doubt as to whether or not this person could be innocent if he chose not to testify; did I understand that correctly? A. That's right.

Q. Stated another way, you would feel maybe he was guilty if he didn't testify? A. No, I don't necessarily think it means he's guilty, but I can't understand why he wouldn't want to testify if innocent.

Q. Let me ask you a further question. If it should develope during the testimony that another witnesses called for the State of Kansas filled in the facts you thought should be coming forth from this defendant, you wouldn't hold that against Mr. Paxton if he chose not to testify? A. No.

Q. You and I know another fellow can tell the story as well as I can? A. Yeah.

Q. So he may have a personal reason for not wanting to testify; maybe he's got a nervous twitch and won't make a good impression on the jury; you would be satisfied that this is not going to prejudice you against this man? A. That's correct.

(Passed for cause by Mr. Braun.) (R. 11-13)

WARREN BRUNER

(Passed for cause by Mr. Elting.)

Examination by Mr. Braun

Q. How long have you and Paul Marsteller been neighbors? A. Twenty years.

Q. Has Paul told you a little bit about the facts of this case? A. Yes, we have talked.

Q. I suppose Paul gave you a pretty good rundown on what he thought the results should be? A. Yeah.

MR. BRAUN: I am going to challenge Mr. Bruner for cause.

THE COURT: The challenge will be sustained. You will be excused until we call you later some time in the term. (R. 13)

JEREL BARNETT

(Passed for cause by Mr. Elting.)

Examination by Mr. Braun

Q. When you sort of have that feeling, that because somebody is charged they have probably got some pretty satisfying evidence and probably means he's guilty, are you going to expect me to put in some evidence that he ain't? A. I think so.

Q. You think I ought to. Now that means after the State's case is rested you are going to expect me to come in with evidence to show certain things here and different from what the State says they are and you are going to need this to satisfy your own mind before you are going to find this man not guilty? A. I don't quite follow you.

Q. I want to be perfectly fair; I believe before you said you believe in the constitutional presumption of innocence. A. Yes.

Q. I want to be sure you and I understand each other. Mr. Paxton stands charged with supposedly obtaining money under false pretenses from a man in this community. Now, the mere fact he's charged with that crime indicates to you that there might be a question about his guilt, doesn't it? A. Yes.

Q. So I understand your answer, even though you don't think he's guilty per se, there is a presumption or a question in your mind about the fact that because he stands charged here that he might be guilty. Stated another way, you are going to expect me to put in a little evidence to prove to your satisfaction that any figment of suspicion concerning my client has been removed before you would find him not guilty, is that right? A. Yes.

MR. BRAUN: I will challenge this man for cause.

THE COURT: Overruled. You haven't gotten near the question. The mere fact that a man is charged with a crime, somebody can think he might be guilty because he's charged, that's true. I don't understand that this juror said that he wouldn't require the State to prove the case beyond a reasonable doubt and would not presume the man was innocent.

If the Court instructs you that this man is presumed to be innocent until he's proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, you would follow that instruction, wouldn't you?

A. Yes.

THE COURT: Overruled.

Q. (By Mr. Braun) I want to ask you once more because I need to be sure in my own mind, irrespective of what the Court's instructions might be, is it my understanding from your answers that it's going to require me immediately to come forward and put in evidence to disprove the guilt of innocence? A. No, sir.

THE COURT: Just a moment, Mr. Braun, that's not a proper question. If the State proves its case, then you've got to put in evidence. If the State doesn't prove its case, of course you don't. You are leaving that element out in the question. That's where the confusion is arising.

MR. BRAUN: Would the Court like to phrase the question? Maybe I'm working on it too hard.

THE COURT: The way you are putting the question to the juror you are saying that your man should be presumed to be innocent after the State's evidence is in. If the State's evidence showed him to be guilty, he wouldn't have that presumption. That's where your confusion is arising.

MR. BRAUN: I beg the Court's pardon, and yours too, Mr. Barnett.

Q. Now let me ask you in this way. Standing alone, with nobody putting any evidence in, at this time do you feel that I have a duty or Mr. Paxton has a duty because he stands charged with the crime to put in something now or even before the State put in its case to your satisfaction that he had to come forth and satisfy your own mind that he's absolutely not guilty of any charge? A. If he's charged with it? What do you mean.

Q. The mere fact he stands charged now. A. If he ain't got nothing to prove, there wouldn't be

MR. BRAUN: I'll pass for cause. (R. 14-16)

SAM PORTER

Examination by Mr. Elting

Q. Would the fact that you worked with Charley at the depot influence your consideration of this case either one way or the other? A. I don't believe.

Q. Have you heard anything about this case? A. Just like I stated while ago, I heard rumors. I don't like to see people swindled out of anything.

Q. You think you could be guided solely by the evidence you hear from the witness stand and guided as to the law according to the instructions of the Court in his instructions. A. Yes.

(Passed for Cause by Mr. Elting.)

Examination by Mr. Braun

Q. You answered the question about the rumors that you say you didn't hear any facts about this case, you heard some rumors, but that you didn't like it when a guy gets swindled out of his money; who were you referring to? A. Anybody that gets swindled.

Q. Did you hear somebody say Charley got swindled? In all fairness don't you think you have expressed an opinion without any foundation in fact? A. I just stated a rumor.

Q. Do you believe that's what happened? A. I don't know enough to believe anything.

Q. You are saying Charley Monroe never mentioned a word to you? A. No.

Q. What is your opinion of people generally in pest control work? A. I haven't had them do anything for me so I haven't formed an opinion.

(Passed for cause by Mr. Braum.) (R. 23)

During the presentation of the State's case, the following occurred during direct examination of state's witness R. V. WOODARD.

Q. Was your first contract with Mr. Monroe a legitimate termite contract?

MR. BRAUN: I will object to the form of the question, Your Honor, as to the wording "legitimate". It implies something here, serves no purpose other than again to bootleg in by virtue of something they can't establish in the evidence. It's highly prejudicial. There's no evidence there's anything illegitimate.

MR. METZ: We have had clear testimony as to what type of operation was being carried out over this period of time.

THE COURT: I will overrule the objection. You may answer the question.

A. Well, as far as I know, it was legitimate because I was licensed by the State and bonded by a bonding company, so evidently it was legitimate.

Q. What were the circumstances that brought about your—let me ask first of all—

THE COURT: Mr. Metz, you are going to have to stand closer.

Q. Was your contract terminated by the State of Kansas, not your contract, your license, to do business as a termite exterminator?

MR. BRAUN: I will object again to the form of the question. It's irrelevant and immaterial unless it has some connection with the charges pending against my client. The only thing he's trying to do is establish something that serves no purpose other than prejudice the jury.

THE COURT: What is the purpose of this line of testimony?

MR. METZ: The purpose, Your Honor, is to fill in on the relationship and the events that have transpired in connection with the operation in which the defendant played a principal part or was the principal.

MR. BRAUN: Your Honor, it implies a crime that is not connected in any way, shape or form to establish anything, serves no purpose other than to prejudice this guy right here.

THE COURT: I will sustain the objection.

Q. Mr. Woodard, what is generally the percentage of pentachlorophenol that is used in a treatment? A. Usually 5%.

Q. Can you describe any of the characteristics of penta? A. Well, only just through book knowledge. I am no chemist. I go strictly according to state and U.S. Department of Agriculture recommendation. A 5% solution of pentachlorophenol will get rid of beetles and it will also correct wood rot when properly applied.

Q. What outward characteristics are noticeable in a solution of that percentage; what outward characteristics are there? A. Penta, if you spray a board and it's in the dark, and shine a light on it, it's a mass of little crystals on the wood.

Q. What, if any, odor does this solution have? A. It has quite a severe odor.

Q. Getting back to Dighton and Mr. Monroe's house, what did you do after receiving the money and making the division as you described a few minutes ago? A. We left and went home for the week.

Q. How long did your relationship with Mr. Paxton then continue from that point? A. Oh, I believe as well as I remember, about three weeks.

Q. What were the circumstances that brought about the termination of this?

MR. BRAUN: Again I will object to the form of the question. It's completely irrelevant and immaterial what their relationships were subsequent to anything they might have done at Dighton, Kansas.

THE COURT: Sustained.

MR. METZ: Could I put in a word of argument here? I believe we can present any continuing dealings of this nature which show the same type of operation that transpired in Dighton involving Mr. Monroe. That was the sole purpose for my question.

MR. BRAUN: Your Honor, at this time I respectfully move the Court to declare a mistrial in this case. The State of Kansas had done everything it can to imply in front of this jury circumstances which are irrelevant and immaterial and so far out from the charges contained in the information that the only purpose they could serve is completely prejudice this defendant.

THE COURT: Overruled. Will counsel approach the bench?

(Thereupon, the following proceedings are had at the bench outside the hearing of the jury.)

MR. METZ: I will withdraw this line of questioning if it will make it—

THE COURT: You are going to withdraw it?

MR. METZ: Yes.

THE COURT: I will admonish the jury then.

(Thereupon, the following proceedings are had in the hearing of the jury.)

THE COURT: Gentlemen of the jury, this question has been withdrawn and I am instructing you to completely disregard anything that may have been said or implied about any dealings that went on subsequent to the dealings with Mr. Monroe. Just put that out of your mind and forget it. It doesn't have anything to do with this matter. Forget that completely and completely disregard any suggestions even made about such dealings.

You may proceed. (R. 43-45)

At the conclusion of direct examination of MR. DAVID MARION HART, a defense witness and expert in chemistry, the following occurred:

(MR. ELTING:) Your Honor, I didn't hardly hear a word the witness said. I wonder if we could wait for cross-examination until tomorrow to give us a chance to get that testimony to be transcribed.

(THE COURT:) Frankly, John, there's no more chance Lil could read these scientific terms than you and I could understand them, and also, we are running into a tight time schedule. I believe we better get the evidence in this evening. (R. 92)
